A. Reading ComprehensionText A: More Coffeehouses in California Ban Throwaway Cups

VOA News, December 29, 2019

A new coffee culture is forming in and around San Francisco, California. A bigger number of coffeehouses there are doing without paper cups. Instead, they are using glass containers or creating “bring your own” cup regulations. The idea started among neighborhood cafés to reduce waste. Now it is getting support from large businesses in the city – and around the country.

5 Celebrated cook Dominique Crenn is opening a café in San Francisco next year that will not use to-go bags, throwaway coffee cups or any plastic. Diners who plan to buy a to-go drink from Dominique Crenn will be asked to bring their own coffee cups, a spokeswoman said.

The Blue Bottle coffeehouse company uses about 15,000 to-go cups each month at its 70 shops across the U.S. The company recently said it wants to “show our guests and the world that we can do
10 without non-reusable cups.”

Blue Bottle is starting small with plans to stop using paper cups at two of its stores in 2020. The change is part of a strategy to produce “zero waste” by the end of next year. Customers will have to bring their own cup or pay an additional $3 to $5 for a reusable cup. They can keep the cup or return it to get their money back.

15 The company’s chief executive officer, Bryan Meehan, said in a statement that the new program will help the company to follow this strategy nationwide. He said, “We think we will lose some business. We know some of our guests won’t like it — and we’re prepared for that.”

Larger coffee and fast-food businesses around the U.S. are feeling some pressure to be more environmentally friendly, said Bridget Croke. She is with the New York-based investment company
20 Closed Loop Partners. It is working with Starbucks and McDonald’s to find an alternative to the disposable coffee cup.

Today’s to-go cups for hot drinks are not only made from paper. They also have plastic so that they do not leak. This makes them hard to recycle, Croke said. She said that large national food and drink companies will not stop using disposable cups completely or ask all customers to bring their own.

25 So, her company is looking for other solutions. Starbucks and McDonald’s paid $10 million to a partnership with Closed Loop to develop the “single-use cup of the future.” The new cup will probably be recyclable and break down naturally.

Starbucks has more than 15,000 U.S. stores and about 16,000 in other countries. It plans to test newly designed recyclable cups in five cities next year.

30 The state of California has long been a front-runner in creating more environmentally friendly systems. In 2014, California became the first state in America to forbid stores to give out disposable plastic bags to shoppers. Some cities in the state have a number of other regulations to reduce waste. This year, San Francisco International Airport became the nation’s first major airport to stop selling water in plastic bottles. Starting in January, in cafes and restaurants in Berkeley, California,
35 customers will have to pay 25 cents for disposable cups.

Many coffee drinkers at the Blue Bottle coffeehouses in the San Francisco area have accepted banning disposable cups. “Of course it’s a good idea,” said Tracy Schroth, a writer who was buying a drink at a Blue Bottle cafe in Oakland, California. “It’s such a small step to ask people to bring their own cup. People just have to get into this way of thinking.”
