Adele - a London girl with a great voice

She's a megastar with an amazing talent for singing and writing songs, but Adele has kept her down-to-earth personality.

A Million-selling singles and albums, a sold-out tour, music awards, and even an Oscar — Adele is today's most successful singer. But success hasn't gone to her head. She's kept her feet firmly on the ground, and that — apart from her amazing talent, of course — is what people like about her.

B Adele is a real London girl, and you can hear it in her accent. She was born on May 5, 1988 and grew up in the north of the city. Her mother, who was only 18 when Adele was born, brought her up on her own, as Adele's father left when she was just two years old. Growing up, Adele listened to music by popular stars. But then she discovered the American jazz, soul and R&B singer Etta James, who became Adele's "favourite singer" and had a big influence on her style.

C Adele was lucky to grow up in London, because it meant she could go to the Brit Performing Arts School in Croydon, in the south of the capital. [...] Adele started there when she was 14 and made some demos as part of her course. She uploaded them to the social media site MySpace, and record companies started noticing her.

D In November 2006, just four months after she left the Brit school, she signed a recording deal with XL Recordings. Adele's first album, '19', named after her age when she started recording it, was released in 2008. It was a success on both sides of the Atlantic. After she appeared on the US TV show Saturday Night Live, the album shot up to No 1 in the US charts.

E Her next album, '21' — recorded, you guessed it, when she was 21—was a massive hit, with unforgettable songs including 'Rolling in the Deep' and 'Someone Like You'. That album, which was released in 2011, stayed at No1 for eleven weeks and has sold more than 30 million copies worldwide.

F Her latest album, '25', came out in 2015, when she was 27: Adele's busy personal life partly explains the long wait: On October 19, 2012, she gave birth to her son, Angelo, whose father is Adele's partner, Simon Konecki. Talking about her new role as a mother in a TV interview she said: "My kid comes first; my music comes second." If her music only comes second now, it doesn't show in this album. Fans agree that it was worth waiting for '25', and it has become the fastest-selling album ever.

G Listening to the beautiful, soulful songs she sings and writes, it's hard to imagine what a down-to-earth person Adele is in real life. In interviews she always shows her wonderful sense of humour, and her own laugh is enough to cheer anyone up. She amused UK viewers recently by appearing as an Adele lookalike on a comedy show. No one realised that she was the real Adele — until she opened her mouth to sing, of course.

H Adele has managed to become a star without having the sexy image of singers like Beyoncé. She is not thin, but she couldn't care less about it. She has her own style — big hair, false eyelashes and lots of eye liner. But if her high heels feel too uncomfortable, she kicks them off on stage.

- 35 I Adele is always herself, always authentic, even when she meets royalty. In 2013, she received an MBE¹ from Prince Charles at Buckingham Palace. She wore a glamorous designer dress for the occasion and grinned broadly while she chatted with the prince. It was a “very proud moment” she said later. However, that didn't stop her bursting into her typical giggles at the ceremony!
